THE Moundsville Reporter describes new method of shuffling off the mortal coil as practiced the other day by a young man named B. F. Garre, in Marshall county. He took a loaded rifle and proposing to melt the load out, took the barrel out of the stock, and "thought he removed all the powder from behind the bullet," and then stuck the end of the barrel into the fire to melt the bullet. Then he sat down in front of the muzzle which he leaned against his breast. He did not have to wait long. The gun went off and killed him instantly. This method requires a little more preparation than kindling the fire with coal oil. They are about equally sure in results; but the Marshall county plan is the more instant and therefore less painful. We commend it to all who think of trying kerosene.

At the Cumberland, Md., rolling mill, Thursday afternoon, a remarkable explosion occurred which is thus described by the News:

"A mass of cinder, weighing about four hundred pounds, had been drawn from one of the puddling furnaces, and is supposed to have lain beside the furnance for a few minutes, during which time the cutside became chilled, forming a sort of shell, enclosing a seething mass. It was then dragged to one side, through a puddle of water. As soon as the mass came in contact with the water it exploded.
